FAQS

What should be considered when ordering your website?

Create a list of topics you want to include on the website. Each web page on your site should discuss one of those topics.

How many pages can the website have?

Up to 5 pages, plus (optionally) up to 2 sub-pages that can be listed within other site pages. Typical websites include a Home Page, a Products Page, an About Us Page, and a Contact page. A Typical Structure for a website:

Main (Home) Page -- Everything you feel someone needs to know about your company right away - short introduction to the company; Convey a summary of what products and/or services your company offers; a list of features included; some quick information about the company.

About Us Page -- Many people would like some information about you and your company before buying. This page will begin to establish trust with your visitors. Let the public know how long you have been in business and some information to demonstrate that you know about your product or service that you are selling, e.g. "I have 30 years of computer programming experience...". This will establish that you are an expert in your field and your visitors will feel more confident about asking you questions and ultimately, buying your product or service.

Contact Us Page – This page ensures that you are a credible business or service. By supplying your visitors your name, address as well as your email, phone and fax number, your visitors will know that you are an established business, and that you are available to them.

Products Page – If you have multiple products to sell it's a good idea to have all of those products listed in a central place. This way your visitor can look at all of your products or services on one page and easily decide what they are interested in.

New Page - Say you own a business that sells widgets and you have customers who have bought your widgets before. You can use a news page to publish your latest special offers, discount deals, news about new products and services, and so on. A newsletter is a fantastic way of keeping in touch with your existing customers and, by publishing regular news articles; this offers a way to invite potential new customers to take a look at your organization, before they decide to do business with you.

Do you offer domain registration service and website hosting services?

Domain registration: We can customize your website address, so that it uniquely reflects your business or service name, i.e. www.LucysDressmaking.com, www.LetMeInLocksmiths, www.AcmeToolRentals.com, etc.

Web hosting: We can provide you with internet hosting services - this allows individuals and organizations to make their website accessible via the World Wide Web.
